What's new in Tiger Fighter 1931 MP049:

FT The Tiger has gone to hell! Again! And for probably the second time in three months! How is it we had a flawless, pristine performance in that great little fire breathing twin-engine road plane and yet were weeping at the altar of utter destruction three months later! It's like a hatred of all that is clean, a desire to smear out every bit of damage that might have come across with this young pilot's salute. A desire to destroy beauty and make things ugly. There can be no doubt that if this pilot, at the controls of this aircraft would have been plowing into the ground at some 80 -85 knots instead of breaking away as he did, we'd be losing a lot more than the cost of a few hundred seats. Right off the bat we might lose a small consideration paid by the government for an engineer's job as a security watchman, a job which he occupies for five years. Next we'd lose a handful of our taxes. Then we'd lose individual wives, husbands, parents, children, and friends. Then the houses and businesses would be more than a little messed up. The ship would be lost for a thousand years, at the least. Just the sight and the sound and the memory of it would make my heart (and probably every other free American's heart) sink. There's a lot to be said for making things prettier when times are good, and chances are, the market will be exceptionally good for a time, but as everyone knows, it gets

For his second Ju-87 rescue mission of the war, he picked up the wounded, untouched aircraft from the crash that had claimed his first, a Tiger-Signal being towed to an abandoned airfield by a couple of sheds, a car, a 3-Ton truck.
